- Estimate the demand model, and test for spatial dependence using the procedures discussed in class, and the provided weights matrix. Suppress any theoretical considerations

The demand model without spatial effects can be estimated by using the package plm:

```
model11 <- plm(logc ~ logp + logy, data = data, model = "within", effect = "twoways")
summary(model11)

The demand for cigarettes depends negatively on the price of the cigarettes and positively on the real disposable income.

Alternatively, this could be also done by hand by including the dummies for both fixed effects and running OLS:

data_big <- cigarette_2var %>%
  fastDummies::dummy_cols(select_columns = "year") %>% fastDummies::dummy_cols(select_columns = "state") %>%
  select(c(logc, logp, logy, starts_with("year_") | starts_with("state_")))
OLS <- lm(logc ~ ., data = data_big)

Where the point estimates of logp and logy are numerically identical to that of plm(). Thus we can see that using plm with “within” model and “twoways” effect is the way to go.

– which model would the classical specification search prefer?

We run all tests including individual and time fixed effects:

```

fm1 <- logc ~ logp + logy

##
LM test for spatial lag dependence
##
data: formula (within transformation)
LM = 46.901, df = 1, p-value = 7.468e-12
alternative hypothesis: spatial lag dependence

LM test for spatial error dependence
##
data: formula (within transformation)
LM = 54.655, df = 1, p-value = 1.437e-13
alternative hypothesis: spatial error dependence

Locally robust LM test for spatial lag dependence sub spatial error
##
data: formula (within transformation)
LM = 1.1563, df = 1, p-value = 0.2822
alternative hypothesis: spatial lag dependence

Locally robust LM test for spatial error dependence sub spatial lag
##
data: formula (within transformation)
LM = 8.9106, df = 1, p-value = 0.002835
alternative hypothesis: spatial error dependence

Allowing for spatial error, the spatial lag dependence is not significant. Thus this classical specification search suggests estimating SEM model.

- Estimate the model implied by the specification search and contrast the effect estimates with a SLX model specification:

Using the spml function, we can estimate SEM model by setting the spatial lag of dependent variable to false (lag=FALSE):

# `effects()` extracts the individual FE, which are not visible in the # `summary()`` eff <- effects(sem)
```

SLX model can be estimated by using OLS, i.e. by using plm() function from before where we include the spatially lagged values of explanatory variables:

```
slx_OLS <- function(W) {
  W_ <- kronecker(diag(nrow(unique(cigarette_2var[, "year"]))), W)
  W_logp <- W_ %*% data[, "logp"]
  W_logy <- W_ %*% data[, "logy"] data_slx <- cbind(data, W_logp, W_logy) slx <- plm(logc ~ logp + logy + W_logp + W_logy, data = data_slx, model = "within", effect = "twoways") return(slx)
}
```

Now, to compare both:

```
summary(sem)

The coefficient estimates above correspond to those reported in table 2 of Vega and Elhorst 2015. Both the SEM and SLX suggest on average a decrease in domestic demand for cigarettes of around 1% following an increase in domestic prices by 1%, ceteris paribus. Similarly both models suggest an increase in demand for cigarettes given an increase in domestic income. SLX coefficient estimate for this is higher. Additionally SLX model provides effects of lagged independent variables of cigarette demand. The SEM model does not provide any additional meaningful parameters since its parameter for spatial autocorrelation of errors is a nuisance parameter.

- What could be the rationale to use the SLX model as opposed to other spatial specifications?

The choice of the model should be based on theory. If we expect spillovers of exogenous variables and spillovers of endogenous variables or correlation of error terms is expected to be less pronounced or absent, it might be good idea to consider SLX. However, there are also reasons to consider SLX as a point of departure even if the theory is not clear about which model to choose. First, when using the SLX model, the estimation and interpretation of spillover effects is more straightforward. In contrast to endogenous models, SLX allows us to parametrize W and its parameters can be estimated. Strong limitation of SAR and SAC models is that the ratio between the spillover and direct effects of is same for every explanatory variable, which is unlikely to be true in many empirical studies. This is not the case for SLX model, where we get estimates of both by construction. Thus SLX can be considered more flexible in this perspective.

- Which type(s) of spillover(s) would you expect in the model for cigarette demand?

We would expect no endogenous spillover effects, since we don't believe that demand for cigarettes in a country should determine demand for cigarettes in neighboring country if there are no shortages. If however, the price of cigarettes in neighboring country is lower, people living near the border could be buying cigarettes in the neighboring country. This is called bootlegging effect. On other hand, if the income in our country increases, the opportunity costs of time of our citizens increase and they might then prefer to buy the more expensive cigarettes in home country instead. Thus we would expect spatially lagged exogenous variables to be relevant: An increase in price of cigarettes in neighboring country should have positive effect on the demand for cigarettes in home country. Increase in income of neighboring country should have negative effect on the demand for cigarettes in home.

- Re-run the analysis using a SLX model with a distance decay specification (between centers) for the weights matrix, i.e. $w_{ij} = \frac{1}{\gamma_{ij}}$ following Halleck Vega and Elhorst (2015). Use a distance decay parameter of $\gamma = 3$.

For this we first create a neighbour list, where all regions are neighbors by setting the distance threshold to big enough value and then compute distances using `nbdists`. They are then transformed as suggested above and scaled by maximum eigenvalue as in the paper.

coords <- cigar_states[, 2:3]

decay <- function(gamma) { distw <- dnearneigh(coords, 0, 999999, row.names = cigar_states$Name, longlat = FALSE) dists <- nbdists(distw, coords, longlat = FALSE) ids <- lapply(dists, function(x) lapply(x, function(y) 1/(y^gamma))) lWd <- nb2listw(distw, glist = ids, style = "B", zero.policy = TRUE)
  Wd1 <- listw2mat(lWd)
  Wd <- Wd1/max(abs(eigen(Wd1)$values))
  return(Wd)
}
Wd <- decay(3)
colnames(Wd) <- rownames(Wd)

```

Using gamma similar to the paper, we get coefficient estimates which are very close to those in the paper:

```
summary(slx_OLS(Wd))

While the interpretation of non-lagged independent variables is similar as in regressions above, we might want to focus on spatial lagged variables. The model suggests that increase in price of cigarettes in neighboring regions increases demand for cigarettes in home region, ceteris paribus. This is consistent with the bootlegging behavior discussed in the paper, which predicts that some people might buy cigarettes in/from other regions if the price there is lower. The coefficient estimate for income in neighboring regions suggest lower demand for cigarettes if the real income in neighboring regions increases. This suggests that if people have higher income their opportunity cost of time is higher and they might prefer the convenience of buying cigarettes in their home region.

- Describe the network recovered by Halleck Vega and Elhorst (2015):

distw
```

```
Neighbour list object:
Number of regions: 46
Number of nonzero links: 2070
Percentage nonzero weights: 97.82609
Average number of links: 45
```

```
46 * 46 - 46
```

```
[1] 2070
```

```
(46 * 46 - 46) / 46 * 46
```

```
[1] 2070
```

In this network all agents are connected, only the weights differ - which are given by the distance decay formula above. This corresponds to average number of links being 45 i.e. all regions except the region itself. Thus the percentage of nonzero weights simply gives the share of diagonal elements of a 46*46 matrix.

Distance Decay Spatial Weights Matrix

Below we visualize the spatial weights matrix:

row

Reminding ourself that all regions except the diagonal are neighbors, we can see that the definition of distance decay parameter used results in few strongly connected neighbors and many weaker connections.

- Who are the central agents and where do spillover effects occur?

We could define the most central agent as one, which has strongest connection to other regions overall. This could correspond to maximizing the nonlinear transformation of distance which we are using. Thus an agent is most central, if the sum of its weights to other agents is highest, i.e. if the sum of its row is highest.

value
MARYLAN      1.2524425
District of Columbia 1.1439427
MASSACH      0.7947205
RHODE_I      0.7545230
DELAWAR      0.3361666
NEW_HAM      0.3198986

Maryland is most central agent. It could be that since multiple small regions from around Maryland are included, Maryland has very small distance to them and thus its inverse is large, contributing a lot to maximization of criterion made up above. Thus most central agent is one which has many close neighbors. From the table above we see that other important agents are District of Columbia, Massachusetts and Rhode Island.

We get similar results when using eigenvector centrality:

- What is the average partial effect of increasing income? We compute APE as follows: $\beta_{logy} + \theta_{logy} \frac{1}{N} \sum_j^J \sum_i^I w_{ij}$ where I is number of rows of W and J number of columns.

```
beta <- coef(slx_OLS(Wd)) [ "logy" ]
theta <- coef(slx_OLS(Wd)) [ "W_logy" ] N <- nrow(Wd) * ncol(Wd)
beta + theta * sum(Wd)/N

[1] 0.6496153
```

Thus, the average partial effect of increasing income of is very close to the effect of increasing income in home only. This is because using the specification of distance decay above, the links between the agents are mostly weak.

Exercise B

Unit of Observation

Cells	Stats
Min	9785713765 [m ²]
Mean	11698674731 [m ²]
Median	11904427037 [m ²]
Max	12364312149 [m ²]

The unit of observation are cells in a raster representing a 1×1 degree latitude longitude grid cover. At the equator this corresponds to a side length of 110 km. The areal extension of the cells varies with latitude. Further away from the equator, the area of a cell decreases. The table shows the area of the cells. The smallest cell has an area of about $97\ 857\ km^2$, the largest $12\ 364\ km^2$. On average the size of the cells is $11\ 900\ km^2$. Thus the gap between the smallest and largest cell amounts to about 20%. They differ because of the distortions induced by the projection of the surface of the earth, onto a 2 dimensional raster grid.

Interpretation of Coefficients

The binary contiguity matrix is not row normalized. This implies that the coefficients for the spatially lagged dependent and independent variables need to be interpreted as marginal changes in only one of the neighboring cells.

Next, we create an adjacency matrix based on horizontal contiguity. To that end we write a function which takes the centroids and maximum distance for the contiguity cutoff as inputs and produces a neighbors list for each cells based on horizontal contiguity. We assign a neighbors status based on two conditions. First a cell needs to have the same latitude (or longitude in the case of vertical contiguity) and the centroid of the cell needs to be closer than a pre-specified distance cutoff. We check this condition for all cells. We then rerun specification 3 and 4 based on those contiguity matrices.

Lets first create teh bianry contiguity matrix based on horizontal ### contiguity Extract centroids of the polygons if not already point data

Calculate distances and filter horizontally contiguous points Define a # function to find neighbors based on conditions

Summarize and visualize the weights matrixes and briefly explain what they imply

In both the horizontal and the vertical contiguity matrix the average degree is about 1.86 and 1.9. Thus most cells have (as expected) two neighbours but some cells, at the edge, have only one neighbour. This implies that the networks are sparser and less dense than the adjacency matrix used by the authors. This is also reflected in lower 'graph density' for the horizontal and vertical contiguity matrix as compared to the baseline adjacency matrix. Visualizing the spatial weight matrices further corroborates the sparser structure.

More generally, the horizontal/vertical contiguity matrix implies that only cells which share the same latitude/longitude and are directly adjacent are considered to be affecting each other directly. It is hard to make a coherent case for why this should be that way in the real world. There is no inherent reason to assume that effects only propagate in one 'direction'.

Still due to the nature of dynamic multipliers in the form of the spatial autoregressive terms, even if the network appears relatively sparse and two cells are not directly linked the cells are still connected. However, the restriction of horizontal and vertical contiguity significantly restricts the dynamic propagation of the effects in this context.
